New York, March 18, 1841.

Dear Garrison:

I thank you for the notice of my correspondence in the last Liberator, and for copying the appendix. If you had found time and room ~~I should~~ to state a little more clearly the occasion and the object of it, I should have been still more grateful, because I think such an explanation would materially help the sale. The bill for printing it was $56.60, and I have some appprehension that I may lose something; notwithstanding the sale here and at Philadelphia has been considerable already. You will pardon this hint, I trust, and appreciate my motive for giving it.

I have made up my mind to attend the "Infidel Convention," and therefore expect to see you soon face to face. Till then Farewell, C. Johnson.
